

Proposed book panel on Thomas J. Sugrue, Sweet Land of Liberty: The Forgotten Struggle for Civil Rights in the North (New York: Random House, 2008)

Tom Sugrue's terrific new book on civil rights in the North takes regionalism seriously, turning attention to the struggle against systematic racial discrimination above the Mason-Dixon line. Complicating the traditional distinctions between North and South, de jure and de facto, Sugrue finds that subtler and less graphic but no less tenacious activism transformed the North over the course of the twentieth century. Indeed, Sugrue claims, Northerners prefigured southern activists in some ways, dismantling Jim Crow in theaters, swimming pools, at beaches and lunch counters in the decades before sit-ins and marches galvanized the South. Sugrue's work on schools and suburbs is especially riveting, as he reveals the legal dodges deployed by school officials and housing developers, and the ways that aggressive rhetoric often backfired for integrationists. He also offers a reappraisal of Brown v. Board of Education and its impact on Northern protest and litigation strategies, exploring the ways that northern activists and attorneys challenged the boundaries of civil rights law. This was a movement less inflected by religion than in the South, where the simple articulation of equality drew out water cannons and dogs. In the North, community action— including boycotts, job actions, school protests, just to name a few— combined elements of non-violence and self-defense. Sugrue's bold and panoramic new canvas for civil rights history has much for legal historians to sink their teeth into, and has already drawn widespread press and scholarly attention. It opens up new ways of exploring civil rights law and twentieth-century legal history.

Four scholars – Mark Tushnet of Harvard Law School, Risa Goluboff of the University of Virginia Law School, Adrienne Davis of Washington University Law School, and Gary Gerstle of Vanderbilt's History Department – will discuss Sweet Land of Liberty, and Thomas Sugrue of the University of Pennsylvania will respond. Bill Novak of the University of Michigan Law School will chair and moderate the session.

Thomas J. Sugrue is Edmund J. and Louise W. Kahn Professor of History and Sociology at the University of Pennsylvania. A specialist in twentieth-century American politics, urban history, civil rights, and race, Sugrue was educated at Columbia; King's College, Cambridge; and Harvard, where he earned his Ph.D. in 1992. He is author of Sweet Land of Liberty: The Forgotten Struggle for Civil Rights in the North (Random House, 2008), a Main Selection of the History Book Club. His first book, The Origins of the Urban Crisis: Race and Inequality in Postwar Detroit (Princeton University Press, 1996), won the Bancroft Prize in American History, the Philip Taft Prize in Labor History, the President's Book Award of the Social Science History Association, and the Urban History Association Award for Best Book in North American Urban History and was selected a Choice Outstanding Academic Book, an American Prospect On-Line Top Shelf Book on Race and Inequality, and a Lingua Franca Breakthrough Book on Race. It has been translated into Japanese. In 2005, Princeton University Press selected The Origins of the Urban Crisis as one of its 100 most influential books of the past one hundred years and published a new edition as a Princeton Classic.

Sugrue is working on three book projects. He is writing a history of twentieth-century America with Glenda Gilmore of Yale University (under contract with W.W. Norton). In 2009 Sugrue will deliver the Lawrence Stone Lectures in History at Princeton University on "The End of Race? Barack Obama as History," to be published as a book by Princeton University Press. His long-term project is a history of real estate in America from European conquest to the foreclosure crisis. Sugrue's other books include W.E.B. Du Bois, Race and the City: The Philadelphia Negro and its Legacy (University of Pennsylvania Press, 1998), co-edited with Michael B. Katz and, more recently, The New Suburban History (University of Chicago Press, 2006) with Kevin Kruse. With Michael Kazin and Glenda Gilmore, he is co-editor of the book series Politics and Culture in Modern America at the University of Pennsylvania Press. He is also a consulting editor for a new series, Studies in Postwar American Political Development, at Oxford University Press and now serves on the editorial board of the Journal of Policy History and the Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography.

Sugrue has published over 30 scholarly articles on a wide range of topics including modern American culture, politics, and law, affirmative action, twentieth-century conservatism and liberalism, race, urban economic development, suburbanization, poverty and public policy, and colonial American history. His essays and reviews have also appeared in London Review of Books, The Nation, Dissent, Washington Post, Boston Globe, Chicago Tribune, Detroit Free Press, and Philadelphia Inquirer. Sugrue's essay "Affirmative Action from Below" was published in The Best American History Essays 2006 (Palgrave Macmillan), and his work has been translated into Japanese, German, and Hungarian.

Sugrue has won fellowships and grants from the Guggenheim Foundation, Fletcher Foundation, Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton, American Philosophical Society, American Council of Learned Societies, the National Endowment for the Humanities, Kellogg Foundation, and Social Science Research Council, and has been Research Fellow in Governmental Studies at the Brookings Institution in Washington, DC. He is also an invited fellow at the Center for the Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford. He has been a visiting professor at Harvard, New York University and the École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales in Paris. As a 2007 winner of the Organization of American Historians/Japanese Association of American Studies Residency, he spent part of summer 2007 at Nanzan University in Nagoya, Japan.

Sugrue has also served on the boards of the Urban History Association (UHA), and the Historical Society of Pennsylvania (for four years, Vice Chair for the Library), has co-chaired the program committee of the Social Science History Association (SSHA) and has served on program and prize committees for the Organization of American Historians, the Policy History Association, UHA, and SSHA.

Sugrue is an award-winning teacher. His courses on America in the 1960s and on U.S. History from 1877-1933 have been selected "Hall of Fame Classes" by the Penn Course Review and he won the 1998 Richard Dunn Teaching Award in the Department of History. He has advised dissertations in history, social welfare, American civilization, sociology, and the history and sociology of science, and has served as an external examiner at Brown and Rutgers, and a three-time mentor for dissertation fellows at the Miller Center of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia. He is a member of the faculty advisory committees for the Urban Studies Program, the Urban Education Program, the Africana Studies Graduate Program, the Greenfield Intercultural Center, and the Program in Non-Profits, Universities, Communities, and Schools through the Barbara and Edward Netter Center for Community Partnerships. He is also a faculty associate of the Penn Institute on Urban Research.

Outside the classroom, Sugrue combines scholarly research and civic engagement. A longtime resident of Philadelphia, he served for more than six years as Vice Chair of the Philadelphia Historical Commission, the city agency that handles preservation, planning, and development issues. Sugrue is co-chair of the board of directors of the Bread and Roses Community Fund, a foundation that supports grassroots organizations working for racial and economic equality. He is also involved in civil rights and urban policy locally and nationally. He served as an expert for the University of Michigan in the two federal lawsuits concerning affirmative action in its undergraduate and law school admissions, decided by the U.S. Supreme Court in 2003. More recently, he served as an expert in the voting rights case, U.S. v. City of Euclid, Ohio. And he was a member of President-Elect Barack Obama's advisory committee on urban and metropolitan policy.

Sugrue has given more than 200 talks to audiences at colleges and universities throughout the U.S., in Canada, Britain, Germany, France, and Japan, and to academic conferences, community groups, foundations, and religious organizations. Since 2002, he has served as an Organization of American Historians Distinguished Lecturer.
